Adirondack Guideboats

<http://www.adirondack-guide-boat.com>

Adirondack guide boats are light fast and responsive. They're shaped like pure sculpture and they're going to become far more popular shortly mark my words. To many of us they are simply the sweetest rowing craft around and your Rovings writer has rowed a broad sampling of craft from boxy paint floats and Avon Red Crests to Maine peapods Whitehalls and wherries to shells and working Grand Banks dories - plus a lot of boats I've forgotten. I haven't forgotten a friend's Adirondack guide from years ago. These boats are not well known very far from upstate New York where they were developed by nobody knows who about 150 years ago. Locals in what was then really a wilderness crafted these boats of burden to haul "sports" into the wilds to hunt and fish. Wealthy city slickers had discovered the Adirondack Mountains as a place for manly recreation - but not too manly. They didn't want to row themselves around. Built to easily haul two men, their gear, two dogs and a deer, they take surprisingly little energy to row great distances. When solo and sitting still take one strong stroke of a 70 lb. guide boat's bendy overlapping oars. The acceleration is startling the speed attained surprising. Built cleverly to be strong and burdensome they were easily carried through the woods on one man's shoulders. They still are. (from "Professional Boatbuilder")

Devlin Designing Boat Builders

<http://www.devlinboat.com/>

My name is Sam Devlin and I'd like to briefly introduce myself and Devlin Designing Boat Builders. I'm just an average guy with a pervasive love of boats and the water. My Norwegian-Irish heritage may have something to do with it or perhaps it was the "ship" bedroom complete with curved walls and a sea-berth that my father built for me as an infant or maybe just the hours of play in a landlocked skiff at my father's marine store. Whatever it was it's indelibly etched on my being. So in 1977 I pooled my resources and my energies and started "Devlin Designing Boatbuilders". Over the years it's grown from a backyard operation to a going concern with a good selection of boats in various sizes with a multitude of purposes. See a fleet of Devlin designs moored together in their usual corner of the marina during festival.
